Date of Activity	7 June 2020

Brief Report	Online Workshop on the subject "Stress Management During Covid" was held dated on 07/06/2020 Dr Kedar says College students experience high levels of stress that may compromise their overall mental health, and they may be particularly stressed during the COVID-19 pandemic. At the same time, university resources are stretched to meet the ever-increasing mental health needs of their students, which are further challenged by the pandemic. Stress management programs, particularly those based in CBT, can help reduce student stress, anxiety, and to a lesser degree, depressive symptoms. Above and beyond the direct effects of these interventions on stress management, these intervention programs may engender less stigma and be a more acceptable approach for meeting students' mental health needs, thus reducing the treatment gap, and perhaps even provide a bridge to further treatment
